Facing Many Directions at Once
Rabbi Ira Rohde

The description of the cherubim in the Bible is vague and perhaps even contradictory, as opposed to the many exacting details given in the descriptions of other parts of the Mishkan and the Temple. One of the most obvious contradictions, which the Talmud in Baba Batra 93a notices, is the direction which the cherubim face. The Torah in our Parasha, however, does not direct them to face each other, as well as saying that they faced the Kapporet, the "Atonement (or Mercy) Seat," which is the top cover of the Ark of the Covenant, over which they are placed. So that would seem to indicate that they faced downwards. Certainly their wings spread over the Kapporet, and while other sources in the Bible are referring to cherubs which were in Solomon’s Temple, which may have been quite different from the cherubs in the Mishkan, they give yet other orientations, which may either mean simply facing “inward”, or facing the “front of the Temple.” The Talmud suggests two famous reconciliations: that the cherubim’s position actually (magically) changed, depending upon whether it was a time when “Israel obeyed the will of the Omnipresent,” or a time when “Israel did not obey the will of the Omnipresent.” The other reconciliation was that the cherubim did not move, and that their position was a compromise somewhere in between, facing generally each other and yet partially turned “sideways.”

We can imagine, of course, plenty of good reasons why the Bible and our Sages deliberately preferred to keep the description of the cherubim vague, leaving them to our own imaginations. But the contradictions in the facing direction seems to open up a real ambivalence. Perhaps it depended upon the particular arrangement at the time, and left room for artistic interpretation. But it’s also probably that there is a real irreconcilable problem which the Talmud is trying wrestle with and find a compromise: The cherubim must in some way be facing in all of these directions at once.

Many interpretations have been given to this problem, and to the meaning of the cherubim in general, to the extent it could or should be discussed, but to add my own homiletic interpretation, I’d say that there is fundamental tension in the direction we Jews should face. Perhaps nowhere is that tension more apparent than here in our sanctuary at Shearith Israel: After all, the pews face each other. So when we stand, do we face inwards, towards each other, right? Then there’s the place at the front of the room where the Sifrei Torah are kept, the Hekhal, the “Palace,” what the Ashkenazim call the “Aron” or “Ark.” Often people face direction for important parts of the service. Then there’re the Reader’s Desk, the Tehila, towards the back of the center of the synagogue, from which the Torah is read and from which the service is conducted. These days, many congregants are used to facing the eastern front Hekhal for much of the service, but if you look at the Shulhan Arukh, there is considerable ambiguity and the answer is far from clear. That ambiguity is deliberate. We must reconcile the need to face our fellow man, to join each other as one community, with the need to each face God both individually and collectively. We must also face the demands of justice and law and Contemporary and the Divine commands of the Torah. There are highly significant and apparent contradictions in reconciling all of these orientations, and the task of reconciling them is more of an art than a science, so there must be left significant room to the discretion and expression of the individual. There is communal politicking here, there is Divine sovereignty involved here, there is friendship and support, love and awe, harmony and tension. We cannot simply choose one direction to face; we must each rather find a way of making our own reconciliation of the need to face all of these directions at once.

Shearith Israel member, Simion Den Hollander, will talk about his involvement with this unusual group, his trip to Uganda, and his close cooperation with rabbi Shlomo Riskin, Ari Greenspan, Ari Zivotofsky and others. We expect to host two members of the community who are currently in the United States, and to hear a few of their special melodies, straight from Puti’s unique liturgical tradition. Finally, we hope to hear a Jewish Ugandan musician, Rachman Nachman, perform his reggae style songs with a Jewish twist. Admission: $10 per person (cash or check at the door). All proceeds go to Puti Village Assistance Organization. Light refreshments served.
