Jacob the Diplomat, the Conciliator
Rabbi Ira Rohde, Hazan

If Abraham’s and Isaac’s was the Heroic Age, then perhaps Jacob’s should be called the Bible’s first great “Age of Diplomacy.” Parshat Vayishlah reveals to us Jacob the Diplomat. Jacob too has become a great, magnificent man, but it has been through a painful process of acquiring diplomatic skill. In a later age, the Torah seems to be teaching us, it is not enough to be noble and heroic: A man must also be clever, wily, and even a bit sly, but he must learn, sometimes through painful lessons, how to develop himself into a skilled diplomat. Perhaps the Torah is trying to teach us, through its long, baffling concentration on Jacob’s brother Esau, to appreciate the value of skillful diplomacy. Wars and battles alone do not “win the peace” between people and nations, and in fact, the wars themselves may be considered somewhat incidental; it is the skillful diplomacy after and around the battles which in many ways is more important in keeping the peace and preserving order. If from Abraham we learn grand gestures of munificent graciousness, from Jacob we learn the finer, more delicate etiquette of how to curry favor, with our friends, and even with our enemies. Now, there are times to be diplomatic, to send gifts, to negotiate, and there are times to prepare for war, to divide the camp lest half be overtaken. Perhaps Jacob was a little too eager to conciliate with Shechem, too anxious to please, to avoid “giving off a bad odor” among his Canaanite neighbors, and his sons were justified in pursuing war in violation of the agreement. But overall, the Torah seems to want us to learn the value of such a diplomatic outlook towards others, and even towards God. The gift of Jacob to his brother Esau, called a “Minha,” becomes a paradigm for giving gifts and sacrifices to God. Modern thinkers tend to denigrate the importance of gift-giving, flattery, and currying favor. I remember being struck by a famous letter of Abigail Franks to her grown son, begging him to be “obsequious” to her brother, his employer- yes, she used that term. But our use of the term “please” is supposed to teach us how important it is to seek to curry favor and the pleasure of others, that others find us pleasing, “in the eyes of God and man.” “And Jacob said, ‘No, prithee, if prithee you would do me this favor, accept from me this offering, for to see your face is like seeing the face of God, and you have shown goodwill [with your reception] (Gen. 33:10).’ Rashi ad loc: comments: “And you have shown goodwill” – You were placated by me, and similarly every [good]-will in Scripture is a language of appealing, ‘appeasement’ in O.F. ‘For they shall not be for goodwill’ – the sacrifices come to propitiate and to seek goodwill. And similarly ‘the lips of the righteous shall know favor’ (Prov. 10:32)’ – they know to appease and seek goodwill.” Jacob is revealed here as the great conciliator, the reconciler, to be exact, for to reconcile, to pacify, to soothe the tensions, is to keep the peace.
