The Seasons of Our Lives
Rabbi Dweck
Senior Rabbi of the S&P Sephardi Community of the UK

Among the many commandments relating to kohanim and offerings in this parasha, it concludes with a full treatment of the festivals that we are commanded to keep. While many of them can be correlated with specific memorable events in our history, there is something deeper about our festivals that defines their purpose. Torah calls these days moedin meaning times that are set aside for a special purpose. There is something that we are not only meant to celebrate and commemorate on a mo‘ed, but also something that we are meant to accomplish for ourselves. Each mo‘ed is an opportunity for achievement in a fundamental area of our humanity. They are times that are meant to be consecrated with conscious intent in order to connect with G-d and engage in personal growth.

Each mo‘ed mentioned in our parasha touches on another essential element of the human condition that requires our attention and care in order to ensure our success in life. They demand that we awaken and examine our lives and choices on Rosh HaShana, seek atonement on Yom Kippur, find happiness on Succot, achieve freedom on Pesah, and invest in Creation and its meaning on Shavuot. The mo‘edim are meant to provide us with a pause for thought in our progression through time in order to afford us the opportunity to address these issues and to consider the progress we’ve made in each. All of the Torah’s mo‘edim include Yamim Nora’im, days similar to Shabbat, in which we are commanded to refrain from creative work so that we might communicate with G-d and spend time acting upon these issues.

With each mo‘ed there are exercises that help us to facilitate and enhance the purpose of the festival. On Rosh HaShana we blow the shofar in order to bring us to attention so that we might examine our choices and their consequences, on Yom Kippur we refrain from our daily human involvements so that we might focus on our souls and our perfection. Succot highlights the transience in life that creates the unique moments that allow our lives meaning and, therefore, bring us genuine happiness. Pesah brings our freedom to the forefront with a national narrative, while Shavuot focuses on our commitment to the Creation through agriculture and our commitment to discover its meaning through Torah.

The mo‘edim of Israel are much more than holy days on which we are meant to pay tribute to G-d. They are more than the old joke suggests: “They tried to kill us, we were saved, let’s eat!”

Lag LaOmer occurs this Sunday. "Lag" is a Hebrew letter acronym standing for the 33rd day of the Omer (the 49 day period between Passover and Shavu’ot). Traditionally, the Omer period has been a time of mourning associated with the defeat of the Bar Kokhba rebellion in 132 CE, the death of the students of Rabbi Akiba, or alternatively, the destruction of the Jewish communities on the Rhine river during the crusade of 1096. Medieval tradition has held the 33rd day of the Omer as a minor holiday as a time when these tragedies ceased. Generally, Ashkenazim lift all signs of mourning on the 33rd day while Sephardim wait until the 44th day (Lad laOmer) to conclude this period of mourning.

The beauty of our festivals is that they provide us with appointments in time to focus on our personal growth by concentrating on the core principles that matter most in our lives. They are mikra’i kodesh—times that are to be declared sacred and held in reverence so that each member of the nation can engage in this national programme of self-fulfilment. Together with our Creator and our nation, we strive towards perfection.

Over the centuries, these sacred days have moulded us into a thinking, motivated, bold people who, despite the myriad setbacks and profound challenges, have emerged with remarkable fortitude and unmatched perseverance. For this reason, our mo‘edim are joyous occasions in that they provide us access to life’s greatest blessings. They are days that highlight the beauty of humanity’s potential and encourage its glory. By celebrating them in this way, they become shining opportunities for us to live our lives to the fullest.
